

BRITISH SEAMEN BEAT ITALIAN BOMBERS

A striking view of an Italian air attack on British ships in the Mediterranean which was successfully avoided by adroit use of the helm.

A BLACKBURN "ROC," one of the latest types of aircraft attached to the Fleet Air Arm, photographed in the air for the first time.

GERMAN BOMBER'S END IN A SOUTH COAST WOOD

All that remained of a German plane which crashed into a wood on the South Coast after being shot down by a British fighter. It was completely burnt out.

COLLECTING WAR PRIZES IN LIBYA

During their penetration into the Libyan desert the British forces wrested large quantities of war material from the Italians. In this picture, one of the first received from the zone of operations, British soldiers are seen inspecting piles of light anti-tank guns which had failed to check the armoured cars moving against them. (Movietone and Gaumont news reels.)

The figures show the toll of German planes in the last five massed air raids, including yesterday's battles, for which the records are not yet necessarily complete.
